Key insights

- Protecting, restoring, and managing lands in Queensland is essential to achieving the state's ambitious decarbonisation goals.
- Ecosystems are valuable carbon stocks and sinks that provide multiple other ecological and human benefits. Regenerating and revegetating land provides further opportunity for decarbonisation.
- Ensuring carbon reduction policies have environmental integrity requires robust accounting of environmental stocks, flows, functions, services, and benefits.
- Natural capital accounting (NCA) and ecosystem service valuation (ESV) trace the stocks and flows of natural resources in ecosystems and calculates both an ecological and monetary value.
- Used appropriately, ESV and NCA can support decarbonisation decision-making by ensuring the multiple benefits of ecosystems are recognised, spatially identified, managed, and valued.
- Land managers can use ESV and NCA to assess and demonstrate the ecological and economic value and benefit of their decarbonisation and nature-positive land management practices.
- NCA and ESV are evolving rapidly. The Decarb-Hub can provide policymakers with current knowledge to ensure these tools are used effectively.

The Queensland Decarbonisation Hub is funded by the Queensland Government and partnered with Queensland's leading universities.

Why is this important?

Protecting Queensland's ecosystems and the carbon they contain is a quick win for supporting Queensland's ambitious decarbonisation agenda while supporting environmental integrity. However, land-based carbon stocks and sinks such as forests, wetlands, other vegetation and soils are under increasing and multiple threats including rapid urbanisation, resource extraction, invasive species, and the impacts of climate change (heat, drought, flood, and fire). The combined urgency to combat both rising carbon emissions and ecosystem degradation is an opportunity for the Queensland Government and landholders to address multiple social and environmental issues through maintaining and restoring environmental integrity.

For decarbonisation policies and strategies directed at land use to be effective and resilient, they must manage human disturbance while balancing economic livelihoods to ensure and protect environmental integrity. Environmental integrity is essential for ensuring the resilience of ecosystem-based carbon stocks, building public and industry confidence in carbon and biodiversity finance (see Carbon Farming & nature repair markets policy brief) and enabling robust planning and decision-making criteria.

Ultimately, environmental integrity needs to effectively recognise, value and maintain natural ecosystems as close to their natural state within policymaking. To this end, natural capital accounting (NCA) and ecosystem service valuation (ESV) are two processes that enable a more systematic and rigorous assessment of the benefits of conservation and regeneration in land use decision-making. These tools are rapidly evolving and becoming more widespread, and it is essential for policy makers to understand their use, methodology and limitations.

This policy brief outlines the basis of NCA and ESV, how they can be used appropriately to support decision-making, and how they are being used in Queensland.
