Group Supervision:

Group Supervision Brigid Proctor, 2008-09-23 The Second Edition of Group Supervision is essential reading for all participants in group supervision. It offers a comprehensive insight into the complexities of organising, managing and creatively facilitating a group or of being a practitioner in a cooperative peer group. Professor Sue Wheeler, University of Leicester. Among the plethora of supervision books, Group Supervision is the only one dedicated to group work. Brigid Proctor shows how group supervision can provide a supportive environment in which practitioners learn from each other's experience, finding positive and creative ways of working with the diversity which characterises all groups. Examining tasks, roles and responsibilities of both supervisors and supervisees, she describes the skills needed for managing different types of group, developing a flexible leadership style, making sense of group and individual needs using creative methods. The Second Edition of this popular text features up-to-date research findings on group supervision in organisations and further coverage of the challenge of ethical decision making in groups. A new chapter considers the advantages of groups for supervisor development and training, stressing the urgency for greater accountability and research. Essential for all supervisors and trainers, the practical information in this book will also benefit those who manage organisations providing group supervision for counsellors and psychotherapists, be they employees, volunteers or trainees. Brigid Proctor, Fellow of the BACP, is a retired Director of Counselling courses at South West London College and has subsequently worked freelance as a counsellor, supervisor, trainer and consultant.

Group Supervision Brigid Proctor, 2000-06-22 This much-awaited book makes a welcome entry into the rather sparse British literature on group supervision. Counselling at Work. This is a welcome addition to the literature on Counselling Supervision. I found it especially stimulating, having used various models of Group Supervision as a Senior Probation Officer and now using it in Listening Post. In both examples, the method did not replace individual supervision but greatly enhanced it. I thank Brigid Proctor for her guidelines for good practice and stimulating ideas for using the potential of groupwork within the supervision process and recognise it as a really valuable Sage-like contribution. Group Supervision and the Influence of Culture Margaret Smith, 2025-12-29 Group Supervision and the Influence of Culture explores key themes in group analytic supervision, highlighting the value of thinking that encompasses different perspectives. In this book, experienced group supervisors draw on their professional experiences from working with trauma, cross-cultural supervision, racism and shame. Part 1 explores unconscious processes, Part 2 looks at working with difference, and Part 3 covers the training of supervisors of groups. Part 4 focuses on managing endings and learning from research how to maximise the benefits of group supervision. Finally, Part 5 explores ethics from a relational perspective, recognising that supervisory ethical practice is influenced by the culture of the day. Group Supervision and the Influence of Culture will be essential reading for anyone providing group supervision, particularly therapists, counsellors, therapists, social workers, probation officers and healthcare staff who provide or receive group supervision. The Role and Impact of Group Supervision for Social Work Practitioners Joan H. Pittman, University of Maryland, Baltimore. School of Social Work, 2009 Supervision in the social work profession is considered essential in ensuring quality services to clients and the integrity of the profession Kadushin Munson 2002 yet little research has been conducted on group supervision for social work practitioners Preliminary data have shown that many social workers participate in group supervision in combination with individual supervision Kadushin Munson 1981 In addition qualitative studies suggest that group supervision may offer unique benefits to social workers that center on group members learning from and helping one another Walter Christenson Linton Hedstrom 2006

The Supervision Group as Protection Pilar Antonia Gonzalez-Doupe, 2001 The Process of Group Supervision Brad G. Baker, 2003 This grounded theory study explored the experiences of masters students as they participated in group supervision Interviews and a focus group allowed nine participants to describe their experiences and their perceptions of how learning occurred during their supervision group experience Participants descriptions of their experiences in group supervision were used to develop a grounded theory that illustrated how learning occurs in the context of group supervision. Supervision group members interact in a variety of ways which allow them to receive input from other group members. Group members constantly evaluate their interactions and the input they receive in group supervision and make decisions based on those evaluations. Group members also described how their counseling experiences and relationships with other group members outside of group supervision influenced their participation in group supervision meetings. A discussion of each stage on data collection and analysis is provided. A grounded theory of masters students experiences in group supervision is presented. In addition, professional implications, limitations, and implications for future research are discussed in relation to the findings of this study.

An Exploratory Investigation of Group Supervision Jo Ann Hoese, 1987 Supervision of Group Psychotherapy Michelle A. Collins-Greene, Maria T. Riva, Noelle L. Lefforge, 2025-12-29 Supervision of Group Psychotherapy: A Training Manual is a new essential resource for training supervisors of group psychotherapy. This manual provides updated general standards and guidelines for supervising group therapy, including those that are unique to various training sites such as private practice, hospitals, mental health agencies, and academic training centers across disciplines such as social work, counseling, psychology, and psychiatry. The manual includes historical perspectives and foundations, research, theory, ethics, and applied knowledge of group psychotherapy supervision. Integrating theoretical, clinical, and research perspectives, it offers a thorough analysis of the dynamic interplay among supervisor, therapist, and group, key elements in shaping effective supervisors as well as group therapists. It can also be used for supervisors training practitioners to become Certified Group Psychotherapists (CGPs). Filled with concepts considered core knowledge for any group supervisor in training, this manual provides the gold standard for group therapy supervision.

Clinical Group Supervision in Mental Health Counseling Training Maria Eugenia Araneda Bengoechea, 2015. Clinical supervision that occurs in small groups involves interrelated dynamics that occur between group members and supervisors. However, literature exploring how clinical supervisors understand and approach group supervision process is limited. Proposed from a conceptual framework grounded in groups systems and constructivist literature, this study aimed to better understand a) how supervisors who utilize group supervision understand, promote, and address group process within these groups; b) how supervisees experience group process and their supervisors' handling of group process in their supervision groups; and c) what similarities and differences regarding group process emerge when comparing perspectives of supervisors and supervisees from the same group. This investigation used a qualitative constructivist Grounded Theory design (Charmaz, 2011) to collect and analyze data. Four counseling supervisors and their supervision groups were part of the study. The data collection strategy involved two individual interviews with each supervisor, group interviews with each of the supervisors' groups, and observations of group supervision sessions. Findings show that supervisors had their own philosophy of group supervision but also that they shared numerous beliefs regarding this process and how to approach it, many of which followed under a constructivist frame. Participants considered supervisors genuineness as crucial in promoting a group supervision environment that allowed engaging in a horizontal and safe way They also underscored the benefit of discussing the supervisors approach to supervision and mutual expectations early in the supervision process While participants shared different perspectives regarding having an initial discussion of group norms in their supervision groups findings suggest that it is important to have certain norms established early on In addition supervisors conveyed that they used a specific group supervision structure in part to promote an appropriate group supervision environment Overall beginner trainees perceived the need for a group supervision structure that enabled them to receive more direct feedback and instruction than advanced students who acknowledged the benefit of having more time for self care built into their group supervision time Supervisors also identified challenges to creating an appropriate group supervision environment More specifically they identified challenges to supervisees active participation and peer feedback Supervisors addressed these challenges using strategies that ranged from non direct questioning to teaching Supervisees however appeared to need a balance between non direct and direct strategies Lastly supervisors suggested addressing additional challenges to participation such as competitive behavior employing strategies that maintain the group s focus and safety These findings have important implications for clinical supervisors for supervision training as well as for future research Pages vii viii
