*Balingene Kahombo**

This special volume of the journal 'Law in Africa' focuses on the African Union's experience in resolving constitutional crises in Africa. How are the African Union's efforts to resolving such crises contributing to the consolidation of peace and democracy – and therefore constitutionalism – in Africa?

The study flows from the assumption that the African Union (AU) is an agent of democratization in the continent. Such an assumption has a long background. At the end of the Cold War, African states were forced to change from authoritarian to democratic governments, the rule of law and the respect for human rights, as ruling regimes had lost their foreign allies who could no longer support dictators. The post-Cold War 'democratic revival' paved the way for the adoption of numerous regional instruments that framed and promoted common standards of democratic governance that African states should observe. This is the case with the AU Constitutive Act (2000), the Protocol establishing the AU Peace and Security Council (2002), the African Charter on Democracy, Elections and Governance (2007), the Grand Bay (Mauritius) Declaration (1999), the Lomé (Togo) Declaration on Unconstitutional Change of Government (2000), the Solemn Declaration on a Common African Defence and Security Policy (2000), and the Declaration on the Principles Governing Democratic Elections in Africa (2002). Democratic standards provided for in these instruments were largely encapsulated into post-1990 African constitutional documents and legislation that governed transitional and post-transitional periods. Domestic courts – mainly courts with constitutional jurisdiction – were empowered to enforce these standards, by, inter alia, ensuring that actions by state organs and officials, and sometimes individuals and private entities, comply with them.

However, the democratic revival promises did not sufficiently meet most peoples' expectations in practice. In many states, such as Burundi, Chad, Comoros, Republic of Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia, Central African Republic (CAR), the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), The Gambia, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia, and Sudan, competition for accessing or maintaining political power turned into violence, instability and armed conflicts.<sup>1</sup> The adverse effect of this situation has been the failure of domestic governance
