

Coronary sulcus indentation between atria & ventricles

MODIFIED-MUSCULAR TISSUE

electrical information associated w/ contraction of heart is spread through the heart by specialized CARDIAC tissue known as conducting tissue once SA node is depolarized, the info spread across the muscles of the atria from right-to-left

Atrioventricular node: however, this node conducting tissue collects the information and sends it via the bundle of His - the right & left bundle branches down the interventricular septum to apex of heart.

Annulus-fibrosis: prevents flow of electrical information between the atria & ventricles; spreads across atria but doesn't spread directly to ventricles because of this ring of non-conductive tissue.

nodal delay (right semilunar) atrio-ventricular valves

Depolarization of SA node is followed by the depolarization of atrial muscles

Purkinje fibers: once the information gets to apex then it is spread via these fibres to muscles of the ventricle conducting tissue has an unstable resting membrane potential so it then becomes spontaneously depolarized

- 1 Blood in inferior & superior vena cava enter into right atria
- 2 then passes through tricuspid valve into right ventricle
- 3 Right ventricle contracts, blood is forced out of pulmonary valve into pulmonary artery
- 4 then travels to the lungs. After oxygenated blood returns to the heart via pulmonary veins
- 5 Empty into the left atria, then passes through bicuspid valve to left ventricle
- 6 when left ventricle contracts blood is passed through aortic valve to aorta
