Ethnic Diversity and Solidarity Paul de Beer, Ferry Koster, 2017-05-11 Ethnic diversity and solidarity are often thought to be at odds with each other In an increasingly diverse society individuals find it more difficult to identify with other citizens and therefore are less willing to show solidarity Empirical tests of the relationship between diversity and solidarity are however inconclusive This book tests the hypothesis that diversity undermines solidarity in various ways It discusses the meaning of social solidarity and the different motives that people can have to act solidary and it examines the relationship between ethnic diversity and solidarity at the national regional and local levels These empirical tests use multiple methods such as an international survey a vignette study among the Dutch population and a field experiment involving visitors to a popular market in Amsterdam The role of the mass media is examined by studying the images of different ethnic groups that are presented in some popular newspapers TV programmes and a news provider on the Internet The collection concludes that although ethnicity is certainly an important factor in understanding patterns of solidarity there is not a simple linear relationship between ethnic diversity and solidarity Even though ethnic difference in itself may be a source of discrimination one cannot conclude from this that increasing ethnic diversity will necessarily result in less solidarity

The Effects of College Diversity Experiences on Student Academic and Democracy Outcomes James Ernest Sirianni, 2011 Institutions of higher education claim they prepare their students to be leaders and positive contributors to society In pursuit of these aims institutions promote opportunities for diversity experiences among schoolmates The legality of these claims has been challenged in court and social science research on the effects of diversity experiences has played a pivotal role in shaping court rulings Mixed results in previous studies and important unexamined questions in this research area prompt this examination of college diversity experiences Classroom based experiences participation in diversity events and the informal interactions students have with racially ethnically dissimilar schoolmates are the foci of the study Their relationships with democracy and academic outcomes are examined and investigative emphasis is placed on the racial ethnic heterogeneity of friendship groups and the relative position of students as outliers or majority group members in primarily racially ethnically homogeneous friendship groups In addition to analyses of the full sample of University of Michigan students analyses are performed on students based on their primary racial ethnic identification and their status as racial ethnic outliers or majority group members The results suggest that the three types of college diversity experiences benefit students They are orthogonal to student outcomes for Asian Americans but significant positive relationships are seen across the analyses of White and Underrepresented Minority student groups Outliers appear to benefit from diversity experiences in fewer ways than majority group members but the results are equivocal due to a statistical power issue Implications for the research community are discussed

Globalization of marketing strategies in the light of segmentation and cultural diversity Tomislaw Dalic,2003-07-01 Seminar paper from the year 2001 in the subject Business economics Business Management Corporate Governance grade 8 Maastricht University course Comparative Management language English abstract lobalization is one of words used nowadays to describe the convergence of cultures Cultures are believed to move closer together as a result of increased travel better communication methods and enhanced transportation opportunities Hassan 1991 Companies try to anticipate this change by offering standardized products to a global audience Examples of global products are credit cards mobile phones automobiles food and beverages The Big Mac for example is a standardized products market globally that it is used by economists to measure the purchase power of different currencies the famous Big Mac Index Marketers face many challenges in this global village but one of the most interesting challenge is how far can standardization of marketing efforts be pursued Cultural differences are a logical barrier to standardization of the marketing strategies on a global scale As there are countless cultures on this planet there are also many different needs that must be satisfied by adapted marketing mixes Therefore standardization ignores the cultural differences for the sake of simplicity and cost savings The knowledge of cultures and the understanding of cultures is important to develop effective marketing strategies across cultures Simplifying cultures is done via segmentation Segmentation helps clustering groups of people that might respond in the same manner to specially adapted marketing strategies Segmentation plays a vital role in the process of standardizing marketing efforts It helps standardizing customer groups How far can companies go in standardizing their marketing efforts This topic is discussed by many authors as mentioned later in this article and represent a dilemma global companies face Either they simplify their marketing strategies to save costs but ignore cultural differences or they adapt their marketing strategies to local needs and incur rather high costs and high efforts The main problem this article investigates is how can the concept of culture be used to resolve the dilemma faced by global companies in standardizing or adapting their marketing efforts
