

The Evolution of the Modern Vocational Training Systems in England and Germany: a comparative view

THOMAS DEISSINGER, University of Mannheim, Germany

1. The "Background": features and characteristics of the two systems

With the coming of the European Common Market vocational education and training have become an issue of general concern. As European societies perceive that both the quantity and quality of education and training provision can be seen as factors of an economy's efficiency and competitiveness the educational experiences of other countries continue to receive close attention (Lowe, 1992, p. 381). Since the time of the Industrial Revolution England has been aware that its educational system lags behind European competitors. Up to the present day scholars and policy-makers have not tired of stressing the need for "closing the gap" and with it also for a radical reform of vocational training and education (Perry, 1976). The deficiencies of the system by which England trains its workers have not recently been regarded as one of the major causes of the economy's poor productivity (Prais, 1989). In the wake of the crises challenging the European economies in the seventies and eighties it also became evident that youth unemployment was increasingly conditioned by shortages in the amount and level of qualifications for skilled employment provided by the training system. In contrast, countries with a dual system of vocational training, such as Germany, Austria and Switzerland, faced less serious problems with regard to the integration of young school-leavers into work (Cassy, 1983). Even though the British rate of youth unemployment no longer ranges among the highest within the European Community, in 1990 it was still at 9.3%, i.e. twice as high as Germany's (Statistisches Amt der EG, 1992, p. 120). Data from the 1987 Labour Force Survey reveal that in general young people were twice as severely haunted by the problem of finding a job or by lay-offs as the 25-49 age group, while youth unemployment itself varied with the scale and level of general and vocational qualifications. Unemployment among those in the 16-19 age group who had no qualifications at all was nearly twice as high as among those possessing qualifications (R.N., 1988, p. 559). With the Carr Report of 1958 and the "Great Debate" which led to the Industrial Training Act the topic was already on the agenda of post-war educational policy when, in 1963, Lady Williams characterized the state of vocational training in England (Williams, 1963, p. 7):

1. There is no supervision of training by any outside authority, and as there is no test at the end it is impossible to know how many apprentices reach a

Governing Muslims and Islam in Contemporary Germany Luis Hernández Aguilar, 2018-03-20 In 2006 against the background of the increasing problematization of Muslims and Islam in German public debate the German government established the German Islam Conference In a post 9 11 world this was a time period shaped by the global war on terror changes in the German naturalization law the proliferation of racism targeting Muslims and the expansion of security apparatuses In Governing Muslims and Islam in Contemporary Germany Luis Manuel Hernández Aguilar critically analyzes the institutionalization of the Conference and the different projects this institution has set in motion to govern Islam and Muslims against the looming presence of racial representations of Muslims The analysis begins with the foundation of the Conference until the end of its second phase in 2014

Governance in Contemporary Germany Simon Green, William E. Paterson, 2005-06-02 Throughout the 1970s and 1980s West Germany was considered to be one of the world's most successful economic and political systems In his seminal 1987 analysis of West Germany's semisovereign system of governance Peter Katzenstein attributed this success to a combination of a fragmented polity consensus politics and incremental policy changes However unification in 1990 has both changed Germany's institutional configuration and created economic and social challenges on a huge scale This volume therefore asks whether semisovereignty still exists in contemporary Germany and crucially whether it remains an asset in terms of addressing these challenges By shadowing and building on the original study an eminent team of British German and American scholars analyses institutional changes and the resulting policy developments in key sectors with Peter Katzenstein himself providing the conclusion Together the chapters provide a landmark assessment of the outcomes produced by one of the world's most important countries
