Exploring Gender in Vernacular Architecture Jessica Ellen Sewell, 2025-02-03 In Exploring Gender in Vernacular Architecture Jessica Ellen Sewell considers the gender of those who create and shape spaces how gender ideology contributes to and manifests itself in built form and what research methods make the observation of gendered experience possible She discusses single gender mixed gender and queer spaces providing a comprehensive look at how gender influences the design and construction of those spaces how those spaces are used and the relationship between gender and the broader architectural landscape In her study Sewell also provides an expansive view of how gender intersects with other categories of power and difference such as race class and age and how this intersectionality contributes to the design and use of built spaces In addition to examining the spaces themselves Sewell explores research methods for studying gendered experiences in architecture She argues that traditional research methods in vernacular architecture studies which often focus on building based fieldwork should be complemented by other methods such as letters oral histories and diaries that expand the understanding of buildings beyond their construction date and reveal how those buildings have been used and represented over time Digging into primary records Sewell posits can help challenge our assumptions about who influences architecture and urban development illuminating the roles of women and others in the building and shaping of space Thoroughly researched yet accessible for scholars new to the study of vernacular architecture Exploring Gender in Vernacular Architecture bridges the gap between specialized scholarship and broader public understanding Students of architectural history gender studies and cultural history will find it a valuable resource not only for examining the relationship between gender and architecture but for engaging new methodological tools that may further their own research

Sexy Architecture Howard C. Friend,2008 Abstract Since gender is a cultural construct this project will revisit the Chicago Tribune Tower Competition 1922 and 1980 to explore how the contemporary notion of male and female are incorporated in American Architecture Gender and architecture will be studied to create a dialogue to define architecture that identifies itself as being sexy Sexy is a contemporary design term that depicts a project as being sensual cool erotic flashy or seductive Used literally it means to arouse or excite the senses While each description gives a general understanding of the term both fail in providing a definite or insightful description As modern designers we must analyze the term sexy by peeling off its cloak to understand its possible implication for architecture To do so one must begin by addressing the concept of gender The construction of gender in our society has been commonly viewed as polar opposites males at one end of the spectrum while females fall at the other end This theory was based on primarily biological factors that science and nature determined for society However in today s society this is not the case Social cultural physical psychological and emotional factors are more of a determinant of gender than just the biological factors once thought supreme As a society that strives for equality amongst its constituents there remains sentiment against homosexuality same sex marriage transgender and cross dressing Multiple constructs of gender identity serves to blur conventional boundaries between social groups and individuals Attempts to form a wholistic society characterized by equity equality tolerance and mutual respect requires a deep understanding of our urban icons To investigate this topic the project will examine two popular gendered magazines Cosmopolitan and Sports Illustrated for their gender constraints and the symbols and spaces that accommodate them The architect must have an understanding of the site in which the architecture is located The urban fabric of the Chicago Loop and other icons of Chicago comprise some of the most dynamic series of networks As architects we are socially and culturally responsible for how these networks connect with the built form Once the networks are developed the architect has the ability to rethink the spatial arrangements that is generate a new understanding of these networks or present a new idea of the city This allows the design to be developed from the inside out This ideology of the networking will juxtapose with that of the imagery of a skyscraper The two will start to form the dialogue necessary to relate gender architecture and the urban condition The project will call for a new skyscraper s for the Chicago Tribune Tower Competition

Gender Equality in UN Peacekeeping Sally Anne Corcoran,2024-04-23 This book investigates to what extent UNSCR 1325 WPS agenda has functioned in practice to advance women s equality and empowerment in the peacekeeping context and beyond The book examines whether widespread implementation of UNSCR 1325 and the broader WPS agenda via gender mainstreaming in UN operations has translated into increased gender equality in peacekeeping operations the broader UN institutional context and by extension the host countries in which missions are situated via norm dissemination The book investigates this via a review of the implementation of UNSCR1325 in the operations chosen as research sites over three snapshot years The book undertakes a comparative analysis that scrutinizes if how and under what conditions gender mainstreaming has succeeded as a strategy to advance gender equality by analyzing the factors conditions that have led to successful gender mainstreaming across the operational context and those that have impeded this outcome The book concludes that despite rhetorical commitments to women s equality in peacekeeping since the passage of UNSCR 1325 progress on the ground has remained minimal and that the operational environment continues to be discriminatory against women Both quantitatively and qualitatively women do not participate as equal partners in peacekeeping and continue to have less access to resources and decision making power overall The book interrogates that by exploring the spaces available within law policy and practice of the UN to pursue the human rights agenda of gender equality and considers whether UNSCR 1325 has enlarged those spaces It also points to the irony of internal UN structures failing to adequately adapt to their own gender mainstreaming mandates while those same structures have delivered some gender equality mandates successes externally at local levels This book will be of interest to students of peacekeeping gender studies and International Relations
