SUMMARY

This paper analyzes the direct and indirect impacts of Brazil's Family Health Program, using municipality level mortality data from the Brazilian Ministry of Health, and individual level data from the Brazilian household survey. We estimate the effects of the program on mortality and on household behavior related to child labor and schooling, employment of adults, and fertility. We find consistent effects of the program on reductions in mortality throughout the age distribution, but mainly at earlier ages. Municipalities in the poorest regions of the country benefit particularly from the program. For these regions, implementation of the program is also robustly associated with increased labor supply of adults, reduced fertility, and increased school enrollment. Evidence suggests that the Family Health Program is a highly cost-effective tool for improving health in poor areas. Copyright © 2010 John Wiley & Sons, Ltd.

1. INTRODUCTION

This paper analyzes the direct and indirect impacts of Brazil's Family Health Program. Direct impacts are related to the effects of the program on health outcomes. Indirect impacts refer to the effects of the program, through changes in health, on household behavior related to child labor and schooling, employment of adults, and fertility. The Family Health Program ('Programa Saúde da Família,' from now on PSF) is a project from the Brazilian Ministry of Health. It targets prevention and provision of basic health through the use of professional health-care teams directly intervening at the community level. Each team is responsible for a predetermined number of families, located at a specific geographic area. The teams provide health counseling, prevention, orientation related to recovery, and advice for fighting frequent diseases and for overall health protection in the community. The supply of basic health care at the community level and the assignment of responsibility to the team of health professionals changed the traditional definition and form of health-care provision in Brazil. This change shifted health-care provision from a centralized model structured around public hospitals in main urban areas to a decentralized one, where the first point of contact between population and the public health system
