

Maori Values

Tikanga

Maori values are defined as the ideas, resources, places, and things which are considered as valuable by the Maori people. Maori are the group of people prevailing in New Zealand. These people are the indigenous Polynesian people who have generated their own principles, cultures, and values that are applied both in their practical life as well as in their workplace environments (Mead, 2016). Maori values can be termed as one of the significant tool that aims at guiding youth work. In addition to that, these group of Maori values sum up to show how it can be properly incorporate into the developmental works so that there is balance in life and work in daily activities. These values can be termed as an instruments where the Maori people interpret, view as well as make sense of the world. This culture and values are very much interesting as compared to other values. People should develop an understanding about these values and ethics. There are several Maori values that had been described in detail and these are Tikanga, Kawa and Manaakitanga.

Manaakitanga

Manaakitanga is a group of people located in New Zealand who offers the best hospitality services to the tourists who come to visit the tourist places located in New Zealand. These people believe in the moral principle that human beings should help each other in order to have a sustainable healthy societal environment. The same the case applies in the great software organization in New Zealand, Kero. The employees working in the organization are supposed to do only the right actions and work hard to satisfy the customers and their needs. The customers visiting Kero will get their queries easily resolved and the employees are happy to work in the environment that offers them the work life balance. Therefore with the application of this moral principal, Kero is able to maintain a sustainable work environment benefitting both the employees and the customers (Karatani & Yaghoobi, 2017).

kawa

Kawa

Kawa is the result obtained through the list of actions. The result obtained must be only the positive one so that the surrounding environment is not affected in any way. Thus the principle generated by the Maori people helps the organizations in achieving a sustainable work environment (Joseph et al., 2018)

It is a moral value generated by the Maori people that are defined as the set of culture, customs, and traditions, and the way in which the community behaves. Here, the community is defined as the group of people coming under the Maori group. These people believe only on the positive activities and they are strictly against the negative actions that could exploit the surrounding environment and the nation. Kero is an organization that has achieved success over these years and it had only the positive impact over the small software industries and the company had attained the goal of satisfying both the customers and its clients. Through the application of this sustainable principle, the company was able to be a sustainable one (Adebanjo, Teh, & Ahmed, 2016)
