Avalanches

When huge amounts of snow slide down a mountain, an avalanche occurs. Buildings and the people in them are buried by a thick blanket of snow. In the Swiss Alps, around 10,000 avalanches occur every year. Rescue dogs in the Swiss Alps are trained to help locate people trapped under the heavy snow using their strong sense of smell. When layers of snow from different snowfalls form, they can become unstable. The slightest vibration, wind, or change in temperature can cause these unstable layers to break away as a large slab, causing an avalanche. There are experts who can tell when an area is at risk for an avalanche, but there is no way to determine where and when the avalanche will strike. In areas that are at risk for avalanches, sheds are typically built over mountainsides so that the avalanche can pass over the road and keep people safe.
