

Great critics do not explicate a text; they describe it and then report on what they have described, if the description itself is not the criticism.

The Great Critics James Harry Smith, Edd Winfield Parks, 1939

Ezra Pound as Literary Critic Emeritus Professor K K Ruthven, K. K. Ruthven, 2002-01-08 Bringing some of the insights of modern critical theory to bear on a great deal of information about Pound's activities as a literary critic some of it made available only recently K K Ruthven provides a provocative re-reading of a major modernist writer who dominated the discourse of modernism

The Concepts of Criticism L. Aschenbrenner, 2012-12-06 This inquiry may be thought of as a sequel to The Concepts of Value and as an extension of the brief core vocabulary of aesthetic concepts found in one of the appendices to it In terms of sheer numbers most of the value concepts of our language are to be found in the area of human relations and of the aesthetic There are also other value vocabularies shorter but equally important for example the cognitive and logical These and other objects of philosophical study for example the question of other minds deserve the kind of empirical survey that has been made of moral and aesthetic notions if only to test a priori approaches to them In the present study an even more determined empirical approach than that adopted for the first has been found necessary Once the moral or human value vocabulary has been identified sentential contexts for the use of the terms readily come to mind In a study of the language of criticism however the vocabulary has first to be sought in the utterances of critics themselves and quoted in sufficient context to make their critical intentions clear The outcome is that the present study is of great length about half of it being quotations from critics The rule adopted for arriving at this length goes on collecting quotations as long as new types of appraisal came was to light

Logic and Criticism William Righter, 2024-10-31 First Published in 1963 Logic and Criticism makes one of the rare attempts since that of I A Richards' Principles of Literary Criticism to examine the problems of criticism in the light of recent philosophical developments The character of critical language and argument the problem of judgement the relevance or irrelevance of moral criteria are considered in detail through examples drawn from the most important modern critics Above all the work is concerned with the question of how logical or illogical an activity criticism is and the conclusions drawn have great relevance to current critical discussion This is a must read for scholars and researchers of philosophy and literature

Civilization in the United States: An Inquiry by Thirty Americans Various Authors, 1996 This book has been an adventure in intellectual co-operation If it were a mere collection of haphazard essays gathered together to make the conventional symposium it would have only slight significance But it has been the deliberate and organized outgrowth of the common efforts of like-minded men and women to see the problem of modern American civilization as a whole and to illuminate by careful criticism the special aspect of that civilization with which the individual is most familiar Personal contact has served to correct overemphasis and slow and careful selection of the members of a group which has now grown to some thirty odd has given to this work a unity of approach and attack which it otherwise could not possibly have had The nucleus of this group was brought together by common work common interests and more or less common assumptions As long ago as the autumn of last year Mr Van Wyck Brooks and I discussed the possibility of several of us who were engaged in much the same kind of critical examination of our civilization coming together to exchange ideas to clarify our individual fields and to discover wherein they coincided overlapped or diverged The original desire was the modest one of making it possible for us to avoid working at cross purposes I suggested that we meet at my home which a few of us did and since that time until the delivery of this volume to the publishers we have met every fortnight Even at our first meeting we discovered our points of view to have so much in common that our desire for informal and pleasant discussions became the more serious wish to contribute a definite and tangible piece of work towards the advance of intellectual life in America We wished to speak the truth about American civilization as we saw it in order to do our share in making a real civilization possible for I think with all of us there was a common assumption that a field cannot be ploughed until it has first been cleared of rocks and that constructive criticism can hardly exist until there is something on which to construct Naturally the first problem to arise was the one of ways and means If the spirit and temper of the French encyclopedists of the 18th century appealed strongly to us certainly their method for the advancement of knowledge was inapplicable in our own century The cultural phenomena we proposed to survey were too complicated and extensive besides we wished to make a definite contribution of some kind or another while so to speak there was yet time For the cohesiveness of the group the good humoured tolerance and cheerful sacrifice of time were to some extent the consequence of the intellectual collapse that came with the hysterical post armistice days when it was easier than in normal times to get together intelligent and civilized men and women in common defence against the common enemy of reaction We wished to take advantage of this strategic situation for the furtherance of our co operative enterprise and decided finally that the simplest plan would be the best Each of us was to write a single short essay on the special topic we knew most thoroughly we were to continue our meetings in order to keep informed of the progress of our work and to see that there was no duplication we were to extend the list of subjects to whatever legitimately bore upon our cultural life and to select the authors by common agreement we were to keep in touch with each other so that the volume might have that inner consistency which could come only from direct acquaintance with what each of us was planning
