

First cycle

At this age, identification should be based on a combination of characters, including the structural features mentioned above. First-cycle Ring-billed has pink legs and a pink bill with clear red black tip or faded black band, recalling Common Gull, in Common Gull the dark tip of the bill is diffuse, showing less contrast to a duller overall bill colour, and the legs often have a green hue instead of pink gink, but note that birds gain more vivid leg pink in late spring.

The plumage in first-cycle Ring-billed shows a lot of contrast, a result of pale grey and bold dark patterns (Common Gull has an overall dull plumage aspect). Ring-billed Gull often shows bold chevron patterns on the flank, while such markings on subadults are less intensive in Common Gull. Replacéd moults (from early autumn) are silvery grey in Ring-billed Gull, obviously paler than the medium grey feathers in Common Gull. Also, these grey moults in Ring-billed Gull commonly show thin dark sector patterns and obvious white fringes, such bold patterns are not found in the clear grey moults of Common Gull, which at most have a faded darker centre.

The white tail has a dark distal band, normally with dark mottling and spotting at the base, and the dark colour runs up along the shaft (i.e. the tail band appears to 'bleed'). Typically, Common Gull has a striking clear-cut black tail band against a clear white tail base.

The underwing of first-cycle Ring-billed Gull shows a characteristic clear white central panel contrasting with dark accentuates and brown basal underwing coverts.

Ring-billed Gull often shows a silvery grey background on the greater coverts, different from the dull grey or brown coverts in Common Gull. Furthermore, the greater coverts can show a barred pattern, especially on the inner feathers, which differs from the plain coverts of Common Gull.

The tertials show less white at their tips than in Common Gull.

If any coverts of tertials are included in the post-juvenile moult, this is a good indication of Ring-billed Gull, since wing coverts and tertials are usually not replaced before March in first-cycle Common Gull (though occasional loss of feathers may happen, check both wings for symmetry).

First-cycle Ring-billed Gulls are variable. Pale birds are sometimes referred to as 'ghost-type' Ring-billed Gull. They show limited brown patterns on subadults, head, and neck, and they lack heavy markings on flanks. The other extreme of the spectrum includes dark, chevron-brown birds with extensive dark markings on the subadults, head, and neck, and solid dark coverts on the larger wingparts.
