

Forest Sector Simulation Models as Methodological Tools in Forest Policy Analysis

Birger Solberg

The usefulness of forest sector models in forest policy analysis is discussed, mainly based on experiences from Norway. Forest sector modelling is contrasted to two alternative approaches: (i) Intuitive, verbal analysis, and (ii) econometric models. It is concluded that forest sector models, properly developed in contact with the policy makers, should be of considerable value in forest policy analysis.

Key words: Forest policy analysis, forest sector models.

Introduction

Forest sector modelling and forest policy analysis are topics of high interest in today's research community. Several of the existing forest sector models have been built with the intention just to perform forest policy analysis. A vital question is how useful are such models as methodological tools in forest policy analyses. This paper aims at discussing this question.

The discussion is mainly based on experiences from Norway, where two forest sector models have been developed. The first, the so-called SOS-model developed by J. Randers, K. Kallgraf and L. Stenberg at the Resource Policy Group, Oslo, on initiative of and in cooperation with professor F. Jørgensen at the Department of Forest Economics, Agricultural University of Norway, was one of the first forest sector models in use in the world. This model was a simulation model based on the Dynamo EDP-language. The model is documented in Tank-Nielsen & Høsteland (1979). A more verbal description of the model and the results are presented in Randers (1977), Randers et al. (1978), Ran-ders & Høsteland (1979) and Høsteland (1979). It seems fair to say that this model has not been much applied in Norway. Its significance seems primarily to lie in the influence on later forest sector models based on simulation – like Seppälä et al. (1980) and Lönnstedt (1983).

The second forest sector model tried in Norway is the so-called IBRD-forest model, originally developed by H. Bergendorff and P. Glenshaw in the World Bank (IBRD) for analysing forest industry investments in South-East Asia (Bergendorff & Glenshaw 1980). This model was applied by FAO and then taken to Sweden and used there by professor Sten Nilsson (Nilsson 1980, 1981). In close cooperation with him the Swedish version of this model has been adapted for Norway. The model is a regionalized linear programming model having 15 regions in the Norwegian version. The objective function is to minimize production costs of the forestry (logging and wood transport) and forest industry, covering the domestic demand for forest industry products and having free import/export to given world market prices. This equals an objective function which max-

Forest Policy Analysis:

Forest Policy Analysis Max Krott, 2005-10-04 Although forest policy is an established course in most European university forestry curricula apart from a special predilection of the teacher its content varies from country to country according to the position of the forest sector in the domestic economy and society In some countries forestry is the backbone of a strong wood processing industry in others recreational uses and amenity values of forests dominate Despite these differences all countries have in common the fact that the diversity of interests in forests has increased Although timber production will not lose its importance in the future as timber is a renewable resource the demand for non wood products and services has increased considerably This is best reflected by the new notion of sustainable forest management which strives at the reconciliation of economic ecological social cultural and spiritual interests in forests In addition the diversity of stakeholders has increased Forestry is no longer solely the topic of forest associations and forest administration but also of a multitude of governmental and non governmental organisations dealing with activities which either affect forest management or are affected by it Finally the relationships of the various stakeholders with diverse interests and varying empowerment have become more complex because in some issues the relationships are compatible and in others not Bargaining on forest issues no longer takes place on a national level alone but also on European and international levels because many forest policy issues are transboundary

Forest Economics and Policy Analysis William F. Hyde, David H. Newman, Roger A. Sedjo, 1991 This paper identifies the essential features of the forestry economics literature emphasizing what is different about forestry and what are forestry's important features for project and program analysis The important conclusion is that economic tools are both available and appropriate for the analysis of a wide range of forest policy problems The report is divided into two parts The characteristics that received special attention in the first part are the embodiment of both productive capital and final output in any standing forest inventory and the long time periods that often distinguish forest production A third distinguishing characteristic is the joint production nature of many forest resource services The second part of the paper visits seven special topics that are important to forestry and economic development 1 timber production 2 smallholder forest management 3 forestry research education and extension 4 tenure 5 policy spillovers from other sectors of the economy that can substantially alter forests and forestland management 6 non timber multiple use values and 7 deforestation timber famine or its counter sustainable forest management proposed as well as established forest policies focusing on five socially relevant topics for the forest based sector today namely European forest governance under a green new deal Systemic changes and the circular bio economy Social changes connected with forest ownership and forest actors Nature conservation and the pursuit of multifunctional forests Living with forest fires and climate change In so doing this book presents a set of timely and rich case studies relevant to the study of forest governance In the final chapter it puts forward an innovative and systematic method for selecting the most appropriate analytical tool that accounts for the constraints and objectives involved in monitoring forest policy The book is accompanied by chapter level exercises and online Support Material which details the various approaches theories and frameworks discussed in the book providing direct links back to individual chapters discussion points and a step by step guide for how each method can be applied This book will be an essential read for forestry students and scholars and professionals and policymakers working on forest policy and forest management Forest and Nature Governance Bas Arts, Jelle

Behagel, Séverine van Bommel, Jessica de Koning, Esther Turnhout, 2012-09-23 Today problems such as deforestation biodiversity loss and illegal logging have provoked various policy responses that are often referred to as forest and nature governance In its broadest interpretation governance is about the many ways in which public and private actors from the state market and or civil society govern public issues at multiple scales This book takes a fresh perspective on the study of forest and nature governance Departing from practice theory and building upon scholars like Giddens Bourdieu Reckwitz Schatzki and Callon it seeks to move beyond established understandings of institutions actors and knowledge In so doing it not only presents an innovative conceptual and methodological framework for a practice based approach but also rich case studies and ethnographies Finally this book is about how actors involved in governance talk about and work with trees forests biodiversity wildlife and so on while acting upon forest policies environmental discourses codes of conduct or scientific insights Introduction to Forest Policy Analysis Päiviö Riihinen, Veli-Pekka Järveläinen, 2005 Policy

The Wealth of Forests Chris Tollefson, 1998 These are turbulent unpredictable yet opportune times for Canadian forestry Never before have competing demands on Canada's forest resources been so great At the same time we are finally being forced to confront the sustainable limit of these resources Now the improbable has happened government industry First Nations and NGOs appear to be part of an emerging consensus that industrial forestry in Canada must change The Wealth of Forests is a pioneering attempt to grapple with the policy implications of the transition to sustainable forestry While much has been written on the theory and practice of sustainable forestry and on the relative merits of regulatory versus market approaches to environmental protection these literatures have not as yet been bridged Using illustrations based on recent developments in British Columbia forest policy this collection provides that bridge by analyzing the potential and limits of market regulatory and other policy instruments as means of achieving sustainability Featuring new work by many of Canada's leading forest policy scholars this interdisciplinary collection is devoted to translating the concept of sustainability into practice in key areas of forest policy including tenure timber pricing forest practices land use zoning and eco certification The Wealth of Forests also considers how domestic and international legal regimes might constrain the adoption of policies that could bring us close to the elusive goal of sustainable forestry Establishing an Asia-Pacific Forest Policy 'think-tank' ,2007 Journal of Forestry ,1922 List of members of the society in v 15 Analyse de Politiques ,1988 Journal of Forest Planning ,2002 Lumber World Review ,1919 Forest Economics and Policy Analysis Research Unit University of British Columbia.
